Harold's Mind Muzzlers

Lets Work Out

Tourson Phelps

Jester Thomplinson was a strange fellow. The second I entered DowDow's Gym, he stood before me in a sort of "pose," wearing a bright yellow speedo. I looked down at his feet to see that each of his toes had a small sock on it.

"The toes are the exit point of the body- for power and energy." Jester said in a whisper. One of the small robed men in the gym ran to his side before Jester bent down and whispered something in his ear. The small man darted off before returning with a cart full of large kettle bells. I had never seen kettle bells this large.

"Welcome Sommer!" Jester shouted at me then grabbed one of the comically large kettle bells.

"Oh I'm sorry, my names not -"
"Sommer!" Jester shouted louder
now. I thought it best to remain quiet and observe what was about to happen.

Jester began pumping his bell upwards then above his head, keeping his arms extended in front of him, getting a hardcore frontal delt pump. I was impressed. "Thats awesome Jest, where'd you learn that one?" I questioned before beginning my sketch of Jester inside my pocket sized notebook.

"I would never tell you, fucker." Jester was not amused. He beckoned his small assistant once more. This time the little man stood trembling, seemingly already aware of what his master was going to ask next, and that it wouldn't be good.

Jester leaned over and whispered in the mans ear and as he did so, the little man yelped out in short squeeks.

"Yeeep! Yeeep! Not that!"

"Yes. That. Bring it now." Jester stood back upright and began performing bodyweight squats.

"I don't even need weight to do this OK?"

I shook my head awkwardly after a moment, realizing Jester was expecting a response to his statement.

"Ok, so this is one of your work out -"

"Bring it here! here!" Jester shouted to interrupt my question, as the little man wheeled out a cart containting a pair of what looked like tennis shoes with small rocket engines mounted to them.

"Wow what are those?" I asked, now excited, as mechanical objects and topics involving engineering are of special interest to me, having recieved my BA in Mechanical Engineering from Skoremont University in 2014.

"Watch." Jester said quietly as he straped the shoes to his feet.

Jester then pulled out an iPad and began fiddling with an interface on it. A loud female voice echoed throughout the gym. "LAUNCH SEQUENCE INITI-ATED. 10, 9, 8"

I stood confused and amazed as we all waited for the voice to reach the classic "zero."

The countdown ended and Jester's small engines sputtered awake. Two great pillars of immense heat and flame emerged from beneath the small jet engines and Jester took flight slowly but surely. He shouted over the now loud blasting sounds of the enginges, his voice nearly inaudible.

"Well, I'm off now! It was nice to meet you!"

"Oh, ok, I, Ok!" I shouted back.

I watched as Jester quickly ascended in altitude until he was a mere speck in the otherwise completely clear blue sky.

As he began to shrink tot he point of invisibility, a small but powerful explosion could be seen exactly where he was in the sky.

"Comms Down." The small robed man said, almost robotically. He scurried off to the back, leaving me alone in the gym now. I Waited for a moment before realizing no one was coming back, then left the property and went home.

A REALMER UNITY PRODUCTION KONGU12395

An Exclusive Interview with Column Identifier Colin Coleman

by Chump Hensley

Today I had the pleasure of interviewing a man who is literally redefining society. We chatted for about 26 minutes and 12 seconds while waiting for our food at the Fnorm St. Exotic Deli. What follows is an accurate transcription of that conversation; for educational and entertainment purposes.

Chump: So what exactly is it that you do, as a self-titled "column identifier?" Could you get into that for a bit?

Coleman: Upon hearing the phrase, some people, really most people, think about how there are different types of columns that you might see in a Greco-Roman temple or perhaps political building, dripping with classic marble style. You know, Doric, Ionian, Bordesian, Green, etc. That's not what I do at all! I have honed my craft at determining whether a particular object can or cannot be classified as a column. Like, load bearing wall in my neighbor's house? Not a column. Support beam in a woodshed? Probably not but it's on a case by case basis.

Chump: Well, what are some of the practical applications of this... insight?

Coleman: Ever heard of rows and columns? Sometimes you have both but not always. For example, your articles in Realmer Unity are classic columns, but you have to keep your ducks in a "row." Ducks is never a column, understand pal? laughs Anyway, I've been contracted by architects, interior designers, construction companies, art historians, speech therapists, and kazoo players to lend them some hardcore column knowledge.

Chump: Moving away from columns for a minute, could you tell me about your morning routine? I've heard geniuses do something different and I'd love to work on becoming one.

Coleman: As soon as I wake up, I make sure I have all my numbers. Used to do letters too, but that's kid stuff. chuckles I start with 1 and go on to make sure they are all there.

Chump: That would put me right back to sleep!

Coleman: You see, imagination wakes when body rests, so I try to keep myself nearly asleep for as much as I possibly can. Anyway, after that I go to the mirror and stare for about 45 to an hour to center myself.

At this point, Coleman sneezed 33 consecutive times, spraying me and nearby eaters with his nasal goo.

Coleman: Sorry about that, but I have been trying to work on my snot tricks, so frequent spontaneous sneezing just is something I live with.

Chump: Snot tricks? Care to demonstrate?

Chump: Moving on, could you please tell me more about your recent discovery and exploration of Edison's Mound?

Coleman: Yes! Yes! Yes! Yes! I'd love to tell you about the dirty mound I found in the middle of New Jersey. Thomas A. Edison, while testing lightbulb filaments in his lab theorized that a nearby mound may be influencing electromagnetism in the field by not producing any at all. Such a mound would be completely devoid of all ferromagnetic materials, which is crazy! He died before he could locate the mound, so I decided to pick up this weighty mantle.

Chump: Go on, I'm enthralled!

Coleman: Anyway, I was easily able to triangulate the mound's approximate position using EMF readers to determine where there were higher readings and then walking backward until the numbers increased again. The mound is about 7 feet high and has an approximate circumference of 12 feet. The best part was what was buried in it: Recycled cardboard bearing the Amazon logo, yet dated back to the 1830s!

Chump: What possible explanation could there be for this?

Coleman: My theory is that Amazon delivery in the future will get so efficient that it will approach the speed of light, leading to accidental time travel if the wrong address is input. Anyway, would you please go? I hate it when people eat food while sitting across from me.

Chump: Of course, Mr. Coleman. Thank you for your time.

HAVE YOU SEEN THE

PIE-PUMPING PRANKSTERS?

We haven't either, so we'd appreciate it if you could find them for us
They owe us in excess of £120 in unpaid parking fines

Below you will find more information about the pumpsters from local residents:

"They look like jolly fellows, but you cannot trust them. They're always on patrol looking for someone to prank hardcore with a VERY unfriendly pie style." - Jolleson Hobslob (44), citizen of Longorberton

"First they sold me a pie which was DIRTY and NASTY to match, but then they knocked me over with a pie to the back of the head a'swell." - Sheila Happlesbury (71), victim of the Pie-Pumpers
